Message from the Minister

The Ministry of Competition, Science and Enterprise, in partnership with BC Stats, is proud to support the 2003 edition of the British Columbia Manufacturers' Directory. This publication is the definitive guide to British Columbia's diverse manufacturing capabilities, listing nearly 5,000 companies throughout British Columbia.

In 2002, British Columbia's manufacturers shipped $35-billion worth of products and employed 197,000 people in all regions of British Columbia. Two-thirds of British Columbia's manufacturing production is exported internationally.

From high-quality wood products and sophisticated machinery and electronics, to specialty foods, British Columbia's manufacturers, both large and small, are competitive suppliers to local and international markets. I encourage you to explore this rich source of opportunities with the British Columbia Manufacturers' Directory.

By all British Columbians working together, we are re-building the economy and creating jobs in all regions of British Columbia.

Introduction

This is the 27th edition in the current series of the British Columbia Manufacturers' Directory. Earlier versions have been published since 1922, when the listing was only 58 pages. Since that time, the manufacturing sector has grown, and we have added information and sections to the directory to improve its usefulness. The current edition is now approximately 600 pages long.

The Manufacturers' Directory provides information about manufacturing establishments in British Columbia. For the purposes of the directory, "manufacturing" is defined as production generally destined for the wholesale market, or for interplant transfer, rather than for direct sale to final consumers. This distinction implies, for instance, that we do not list bakeries selling only to in-store customers. However, we include some custom products, such as log homes, that may be made to order for the final consumer. The directory does not contain information regarding leasing, distribution, or service companies; it does, however, include software publishers. All listings are voluntary.

The directory is updated each year by contacting the listed manufacturers, and by comparing the listings with other databases and published sources, to ensure that coverage is as complete as possible. Since 1993, we have included the approximate sales volume of each company. This is intended as a supplement to the employment size, and as an indicator of the size of order a manufacturer might be able to fill quickly. The employment size may now be shown as a single-figure estimate rather than as a range. The employment figures we provide are, nevertheless, only very rough indicators, loosely taking into account seasonal variations and the mix between full and part-time workers.

Product categories are a key feature of the Manufacturers' Directory. Over 3,000 product types are maintained. This allows companies to be identified on the basis of what they produce, and also allows us to group similar companies for easy reference. An increasing number of manufacturers are also providing us with their own free-form descriptions of their products and services. These are particularly valuable when our established categories cannot fully describe the unique aspects of each manufacturer.

The directory can serve as a statistical tool, showing the extent of manufacturing by region and community and the approximate size of companies. The information is available by industrial sector, following the detailed North American Industrial Classification System used by Statistics Canada. Computer access to the directory database offers flexible use of the region, community, industry, and other codes. The printed directory is also arranged in a number of sections, which speeds up searches considerably.

How to Use This Directory

The directory's sections are distinguished by shading on the page edges.

The first section contains a listing of the British Columbia manufacturers in alphabetical order, showing all the basic information about each company.

The other sections are intended as guides to locating specific companies according to their products, industry, or community. Each of these sections provides the company name and telephone number, community, employment size, and exporter status. The products section is listed in alphabetical order, while the communities are listed in alphabetical order of regional districts, and then in alphabetical order of community within each district. The industry section is listed in numerical order of the industry code. This allows similar industries to be grouped together. The industry section, however, contains both an alphabetical and numerical index.

While the product, industry, and community sections can each be used alone, they can be very effective when linked together through the main alphabetical listing. For example, a search for a specific product will produce the names of one or more companies. Checking these companies in the main listing will reveal industry codes, and checking those industry codes may reveal additional companies that were not identified in the original product search.

Computer Access to the Manufacturers' Directory

The directory is continuously updated using an interactive computer system—all changes that come to our attention are immediately recorded and ready for distribution. Access to this database is provided, free of charge, over the Internet at <http://www.made-in-bc.ca>

Not only is the Internet directory more up-to-date than the printed version, but the computer program can select companies based on location, size, industry, postal code, products, or any combination of these.

Electronic Text File Version of the Database—Some users will prefer to draw the data into their own computer in order to work more intensively with the information. This is facilitated by the purchase of an extraction from our database. The resulting file is in CSV format.

The electronic text file is available for $350 plus GST and PST. It will be provided as a compressed file delivered by email, or alternatively, on a single high density diskette. A sample file is available on the Internet site so you can determine the compatibility of the file structure with your needs. If you regularly use this product you will want to repurchase it at least once each year.

For information on the diskette version of directory, please contact us, toll-free, at: (888) 322-3284

Who to Call for Information?

BC STATS can provide additional information about manufacturing in the province. We also maintain a broad range of data about the other sectors of the economy, as well as about the regions of the province. Also, you can visit us on the web at: <http://www.bcstats.gov.bc.ca> for the latest statistics on our province. Our email address is: bc.stats@gems8.gov.bc.ca.

If you would like to know more, please contact Data Services at: (250) 387-0327. For information specifically relating to the manufacturing sector, please contact Paul Gosh, Manager, Data Services, at (250) 387-9221, or via email at: paul.gosh@gems1.gov.bc.ca

British Columbia Manufacturing Shipments 1995-2002

Data provided by Statistics Canada, CANSIM.
Revisions are usually made to the latest two years of monthly data.

This information represents the estimated value of goods by the manufacturers based on the 1997 North American Industrial Classification System).
